

Notices of Intent to Disapprove Applications and Notifications

When a civil penalty becomes overdue or an operator or landowner does not complete the tasks listed on an enforcement order, the department may issue a Notice of Intent to Disapprove (NOID) and refuse to accept forest practices applications from that individual or company. The individual who received the notice may not participate in any form of forest practice on state or private land in the State of Washington as an operator, employee, supervisor, manager, or consultant [WAC 222-46-070(2)(e)].

Forest practices include, but are not limited to, activities such as:

- Operating equipment
- Driving log trucks
- Tree planting
- Vegetation management
- Timber harvesting
- Forestry consulting
- Supervising forestry activities
- Certain firefighting activities

The persons or companies listed below have an effective Notice of Intent to Disapprove. It is illegal to hire them or contract with them in the State of Washington to conduct a forest practice on state or private forested lands.

Generally, a Notice of Intent to Disapprove is lifted when the operator or landowner completes the tasks listed on an enforcement order or pays the overdue penalty for which the notice was issued. After the Notice is lifted, a landowner or operator may again participate in forest practices in the State of Washington.
